When the Buddha before entering MahaPariNirvana, left this advice:

"O Monks! Do not grieve! Even if I were to live in the world for as long as many eons, our coming together would have to end. You should know that all things in the world are impermanent; coming together inevitably means parting. Do not be troubled, for this is the nature of life. Diligently practice, you must seek liberation immediately. Within the light of wisdom, destroy the darkness of ignorance. Nothing is secure. Everything in this life is precarious. Always wholeheartedly seek the way of liberation. All things in the world, whether moving or non-moving, are characterized by disappearance and instability. Time is passing. I am about to cross over....This is my final teaching."

"Superstitious awe of astrology makes one an automation, slavishly dependent on mechanical guidance. The wise man defeats his planets – which is to say, his past—by transferring his allegiance from the creation to the Creator. The more he realized his unity with Spirit, the less he can be dominated by mater.

The soul is ever free; it is deathless because birthless.

It cannot be regimented by stars.”
